New research published in the journal Microorganisms reveals that one of the health consequences of getting "vaccinated" for the Wuhan coronavirus (COVID-19) is a 37 percent loss of life expectancy.

The paper, called "A Critical Analysis of All-Cause Deaths during COVID-19 Vaccination in an Italian Province," examines death rates among different groups of people, including unvaccinated, one-dose injected, two-dose injected, and three- or more-dose injected.

Those who get the most shots are the most likely to die, is the short of it.

People who get jabbed with two doses of a COVID shot – most "fully vaccinated" Americans took one of the two-dose mRNA (modRNA) injection series from either Pfizer and BioNTech or Moderna – are 137 percent more likely than the unvaccinated to die within 739 days post-jab.

Are vaccines causing our pets to live shorter lives?

If COVID injections were the only threat to society, we might stand a chance. The problem is that all vaccine injections are linked to negative health outcomes, including those administered to pets at veterinary clinics.

A case in point is a story told by "Napoleon" (@napoleonbusch2) on X about what veterinary vaccines did to a family of puppies he and his family got about 10 years ago.

"There were six puppies and they all died of cancer about five years ago except for my George," Napoleon wrote. "He never had flea treatments or any vaccines. He's still going strong at 15 and going for walks every day."

This story prompted another named "Snoid" (@Snoidbergg) to reveal that vets administer the same vaccine doses to small dogs as they do to larger dogs since there are no regulations for either vaccines or food for dogs.

"Only get unvaccinated puppies," Snoid urged. "Avoid flea poisons and flea collars. Feed your dog a raw organ and raw meat diet for teeth and general health just as wolves did."

Cats are usually the ones that attract fleas, though someone named "Katharina Münz Kátla Mortensen Katlyn S. Coen" (@katharina_munz) responded that her family has five cats in the house and no fleas, despite never using anti-flea treatments.

"Worse – he has a Masters in goat reproduction," responded the guy with the six puppies who died save for the one that was not vaccinated. "In most parts of the world, goats are a pest. Bourla has a Masters in mammalian pest management. Let that sink in."

Erin Elizabeth from Health Nut News joined the conversation by revealing that all of her pets have lived 20 years except for one who only lived to 19-and-a-half because she was a rescue dog who was probably older to begin with than rescue workers thought.

"Our cats all lived 20 years," Elizabeth added.

It is never a good idea to get injected for the Chinese Virus. Find out more at ChemicalViolence.com.
